African Americans and College Choice: The Influence of Family and School Kassie Freeman
Assesses the influence of family and school on African American students' college decision-making processes.

Acknowledging the disparity between the number of African American high school students who aspire toward higher education and the number who actually attend, this book uncovers factors that influence African American students' decisions regarding college. Kassie Freeman brings new insights to the current body of research on African Americans and higher education by examining the impact that family, school, community, and home have in the decision-making process. She explores specific factors that contribute to a student's predisposition toward higher education, including gender, economics, and high school curriculum, and seeks to bridge the gap in understanding why aspiration does not immediately translate into participation. Educators and policy makers interested in increasing African American students' participation in higher education will benefit from the exploration of this paradox.

Kassie Freeman is Dean and Professor of Education at Dillard University. She is the editor of African American Culture and Heritage in Higher Education Research and Practice.

Loretta Manson:

As a scholar exactly feel bored to help reading. If their teacher inquired them to go to the library or to make summary for some guide, they are complained. Just small students that has reading's heart and soul or real their interest. They just do what the instructor want, like asked to go to the library. They go to generally there but nothing reading very seriously. Any students feel that examining is not important, boring as well as can't see colorful pictures on there. Yeah, it is to get complicated. Book is very important in your case. As we know that on this period of time, many ways to get whatever we wish. Likewise word says, ways to reach
